The centre of operations.

This effect is achieved by having only every second ceiling level appear as a horizontal structuring element in the facade. The other ceiling levels remain hidden behind the glass facade. The facade facing the forecourt consists of curved glass elements that curve outwards between the visible supports. They create a three-dimensional depth effect on the facade.

In addition to office and meeting rooms and a catering area, the ground floor houses an art forum. The two basement levels contain building services rooms and parking spaces for cars.

The project will be certified according to the SNBSv2.0 building construction standard.

Impressions

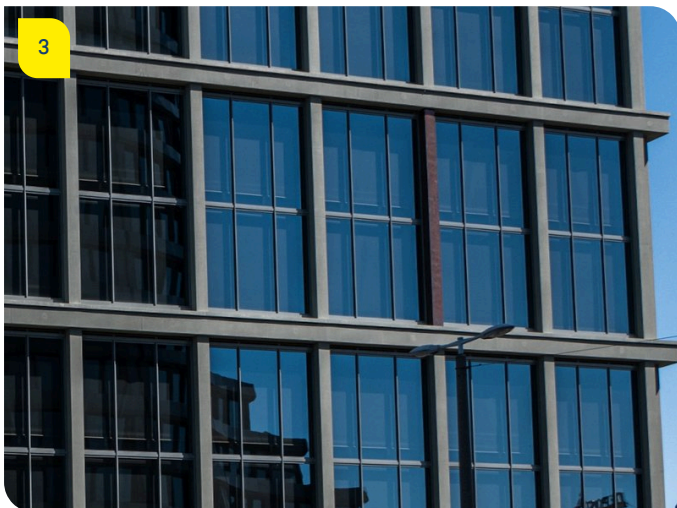

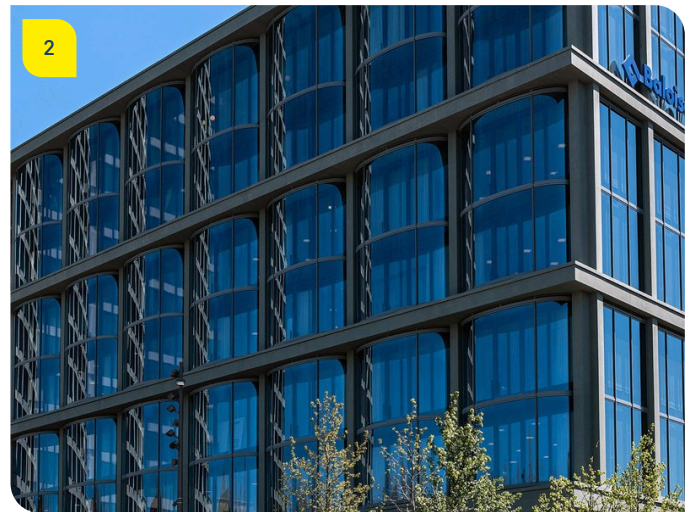

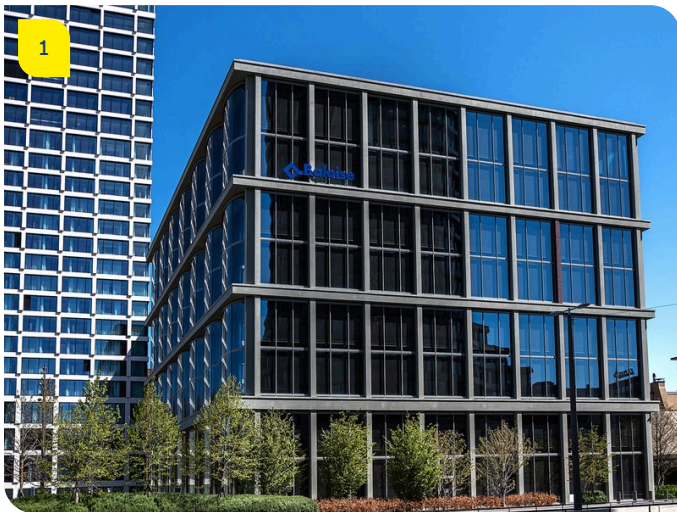

Image notes

1

Strikingly elegant.

The Baloise Group's new headquarter is the landmark of the Baloise Park with its elegant look.

3

Design element with symbolic power.

The so-called copper support symbolises the foundation stone of the building. The names of the project participants are engraved on the copper sheet covering the concrete support.

2

Futuristic arched windows.

The representative entrance facade fascinates with the depth effect created by curved glass elements.

4

Space for an elegant reception.

The spacious reception area is made of high-quality materials and designed with plenty of open space.
